Recent studies have also established a role for cytokines in the pathophysiology of disorders of the CNS. This is true in the context of many CNS lesions, including multiple sclerosis, AIDS encephalopathy, ischemia, trauma and malignancy. This program project focuses on the regulation of tumor necrosis factor (TNF) and other cytokine and chemokine networks in pathologic conditions of the CNS, and the roles of these molecules in malignancy. The major goals are to define the biologic characteristics of TNF, tumor necrosis factor-related apoptosis-inducing ligand (TRAIL), and cytokines, chemokines, and related receptors that may help to define their roles in tumor biology, and the pathophysiology of diseases of the nervous system. The program is supported by four core laboratories which will permit the centralization of technical and administrative functions, as well as the technical support required for conducting the scientific projects. Dr. Emil "Tom" Apfel (core A) will direct a grant to study acute and chronic inflammatory responses, particularly with respect to the appearance of reactive glial cells and glial cytokines. Dr. Werner Parrino (core B) will direct a grant to study TNF, IL-1, TGF β and other cytokines, chemokines, and related receptors, particularly in the context of malignant gliomas. Dr. Eva Boras (core C) will direct a grant to study the role of cytokines and chemokines in infection and immunity, particularly with respect to their ability to regulate the expression and secretion of class I MHC proteins, antigen processing and presentation to T cells. Dr. Gail R. Brown (core D) will direct a grant to study glioblastomas, particularly with respect to their ability to stimulate the expression of genes for
